Melbourne– April 17, 2018– In an Australian first, online family law firm; Separate Together, has partnered with Neota Logic to create an artificial intelligence (AI) platform that revolutionises finalising formal legal separation agreements.

The platform transforms the provision of traditional family law legal services in Australia by creating the draft legal document to have separating couples' agreements about the division of assets, debts and superannuation formalised in a way that is recognised under the current Family Law Act 1975 (Cth).

Neota Logic is the creator of a leading AI-driven platform for the intelligent automation of expertise, workflow and documents. By using AI, this essential separation document can be created by the user immediately, at an affordable price and can ultimately save couples from having to engage a lawyer altogether.

“The idea came after I recognised that there is an increasing trend in separating couples reaching an agreement without going to court, and more than 90 percent of litigated family law matters are resolved before trial with again, couples reaching an agreement. Here at Separate Together, we are all about continuing to streamline the separation process by providing accessibility to quality family law legal services at a reasonable price,” said Director, Siobhan Mullins.

Separate Together also provides high quality legal services and consultations all through their online platform, which allows for them to offer their services at a lower price point.

“I am passionate about making the law even more accessible to everyday Australians, by streamlining the process of drafting legal documents by using modern technology. I hope this is just the beginning for the use of new technology in Australian law firms to help individuals in tough situations,” concluded Ms Mullins.
